

So... why are we here?

Marrying, Steven Vondruska and Abree Carty (finally). Soon enough you can stop questioning if they're actually going to get married. Please don't ask the couple about when they're having kids; they don't know yet. And, yes, Fez, Steven got a girl.

What is this thing?

This fine piece of paper is a guide to this evening's events. We'd like to minimize confusion and help the evening to flow smoothly. Some people might prefer to call this a program, but we aren't that fancy.

How long is this going to take?

All depends on how you look at it. Technically, we have the hall for six hours. The ceremony itself, however, is aimed to be as short and painless as possible while still making it legal. The reception will immediately follow the wedding and you are already conveniently seated at your spot for dinner. Everything wraps up at 11pm. Until then, have fun!

Who's standing up there?

One is certainly hoping the bride and the groom. If they aren't, please see another guide. There should be two bridesmaids: Kristen Halliday and Lisa Case. Then we have the non-traditional grooms'men', being John-Rine "Fez" Zabanal and Amanda Oakes. Lastly, the lady talking in the middle is the officiant, Shari Caruso.

What is that ∞^3 symbol?

Long, long ago, the couple had to find a new way to express their love to one another. Essentially, "I love you" wasn't enough. They kept "one upping" each. Eventually, a ceiling was reached when Abree proclaimed "I love you times infinity cubed". It has stuck ever since.

That was the ceremony? What now?

I told you that the ceremony was going to be painless. It was designed that way. After everyone has filed out, feel free to mingle amongst friends and family. We have an open bar, a table of games and a photobooth to keep you entertained.

Games and a Photobooth?!

Yep! An assortment of board and card games can be found on the table near the back of the room. Please return them in the same condition you found them in so other guests can enjoy them. Also a photobooth is available to take pictures in your fancy-schmancy clothes. The pictures taken from it tonight will be posted online tomorrow so everyone can laugh. Also, there are props available if you want to be silly.

I'm hungry. Feed me seymour!

Dinner begins at 6:30pm. Feel free to munch on the snacks on the tables to hold yourself over 'til your table is called up for dinner.

I want the couple to kiss. How do I clink a plastic "glass"?

You don't. Continuing with the non-traditional idea...to make the couple kiss you'll have to play a trivia game about the couple. It's quite simple to play. You'll find a basket of folded paper near the DJ stand. Pull a piece of paper and read the question. If you answer the question correctly, the couple kisses. Get it wrong, and you'll be eaten by a magical leopluradon. The DJ has an answer sheet to all the questions to verify the couple isn't lying.

Okay, sounds great! But when does the party start?!

Right after the first dance for the couple. If the bride has anything to say about it, the first dance will happen right at 7:20pm. Should you decide to partake in the consumption of alcohol to assist in partying, obviously do so responsibly. To put a little teeth into that statement, there is an off-duty police officer here all evening. Also, the DJ is accepting requests, but be aware the couple created a must play list and a do not play list.

I'm le tired.

The couple thanks you very much for celebrating this day with them. They certainly hope you enjoyed yourself. If you took any digital photos of the evening, the couple would love to have a copy. An easy way to do that would be uploading them to stevenandabree.com. While you're there you can take a look at other pictures from the evening and the possible horrifying photobooth pictures.
